

4447 Hawthorne St., N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20016
January 21, 1996

Dear Theresa,

We know that you've been disappointed in our responses to your longstanding war with the Alaska Bar and Senator Stevens. Maybe we should have done more to help, but if we had it wouldn't have been the kind of help you expected. We would have urged you more strongly to drop the whole thing. Instead you have taken a series of disappointment that most people would have shrugged off (there are other professions than law, other places to live than Alaska) and transformed it into a self defeating feud with the Alaska establishment.

From the material you have sent us, it looks as if you may be on the verge of tearing your family apart. But it may not be too late. You might be able to turn this thing around and stay out of jail. It's worth a try, for the sake of your husband and children. A good place to start would be to seek professional help. At any rate, won't you please get a grip on yourself and stop the threats and assaults and disorderly conduct and violations of parole?

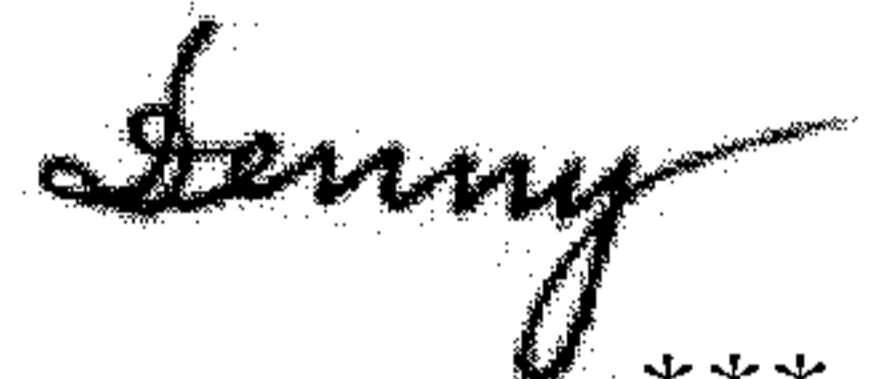

Sincerely yours,

David Hensler*

Margaret Hensler

Dennis Drabelle

*David J. Hensler, Partner and Member, Hogan & Hartson LLP since 1968 www.hhlaw.com, djhensler@hhlaw.com, 555 13th Street, N.W. #800E, Washington, D.C. 20005 (202)637-5630, graduate of St. Louis University School of Law, grew up in St. Louis, Missouri. (Please also review on the homepage "Background Alaska Legal Issues" third down on left hand side "Summary Payments to Law Firms 1994-99 by State of Alaska" Hogan & Hartson LLP #26 Fiscal Year 1997 $75,000 and Fiscal Year 1998 $327,506.)

Margaret Nusrala Hensler, wife of David, graduate Maryville University 1967 and Villa Duchesne 1963, I was a bridesmaid in their wedding, 4447 Hawthorne Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20016, (202)686-0559, grew up in St. Louis, Missouri.

Dennis J. Drabelle, Book Reviewer for Washington Post, Washington, D.C., www.washingtonpost.com 3001 Veazey Terrace, Washington, D.C. 20008, (202)362-5706, graduate of University of Pennsylvania School of Law, grew up in St. Louis, Missouri.